When I returned to church and being a fully practicing catholic 5 years ago, I was compelled to ask quite a few people to forgive my actions and words towards them in my past. It was very hard to do. I was astonished that all I asked forgiveness of said the same thing, "there is nothing to forgive" they knew better than I and I cried over their responses. It was truly an eye opening freeing thing.

♥ "Be kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, as God in Christ forgave you." (Ephesians 4:32) Excellent homily!! ♥ I loved reading "The Amazing Secret of Purgatory." Finding out that the sins which most lead to Purgatory are those against charity, against the love of thy neighbour, hardness of heart, hostilities, slandering and calumny was very eye-opening. In her interview with Sister Emmanuel, Mystic Maria Simma said those who have a good heart toward everyone have the greatest chance of ...

AMEN. THE most constructive way to be able to forgive, especially when we are having great difficulty doing it, is by praying that God help and Bless the person who has hurt us, just as Our Lord taught us to do. This removes the hurt from us, and helps the wrongdoers also. It's a win/win.

No it does not remove the hurt for people who have been severely traumatized and in fact in some cases there's more harm than good.

@RD Bare I'm terribly sorry for any traumatic experiences you may have been through. But the fact of the matter is we are commanded to love our enemies. I've not experienced much hardship in my life other than of my own doing and I'm certainly not condemning you but you must pray for those who hurt you. Forgive them for your own peace of mind, to cleanse your own heart. Pray for they're repentance and that they'll make amends with the Father. Please do not hold onto whatever terrible things you ...

@Matt Berg you need to be able to define forgiveness. Most people who demand blind forgiveness are not comfortable with accountability and don't care much about right and wrong. In my understanding love and forgiveness mean that you do not violate the ethical code and continue to do the right thing. It has nothing to do with denial nor feeling warm and tender toward evil people. One may not withhold justice from an enemy. Neither should justice be denied to victims.

@RD Bare Forgiveness is letting go of past hurts. Moving on. When we can't let go of them, the negativity that it causes can destroy us, and cause us to focus more on our hurt and anger than on God. We are to put God ahead of all things, which means to hold onto the hurt causes US to sin even more. It causes a spreading effect of the first sin that was done to us that never should have happened in the first place, but did. We must not lose our hope and positivity, even though others have lost theirs. That's wh...

 @MJ Seven This is fine and dandy in some situations but not for people who have been severely traumatized because the damage does end. It cannot be wished away. Somehow or another when people speak and forgiveness in this way they are trivializing the harm and showing cruelly placing the onus on the victim. There's no point in continuing this exchange because I have thought and studied on this matter for many years I believe what I believe while you believe something else.

 @MJ Seven Please see my reply to the other poster. One thing I would add is that many people who feel as the two of you do about forgiveness really want denial. Denial is a form of lying and who is the father of lies?

 @RD Bare There is NO denying the hurt. If Jesus felt the same way as you do, and couldn't let go of what OUR SINS did to Him, there would be no Salvation for us.

 @MJ Seven The difference between God and man is vast. I could suggest that you research the psychology of trauma but I don't think it would be beneficial if you don't have the academic background. Let me suggest this. Commands from the Torah include justice justice shall you pursue and You shall not stand idly by your brothers blood. These are commandments that Christians love to flout. We will not agree. Keep studying and praying and thanking. How forgiving was the church during the Crusades, Inquisitio...

 @RD Bare Remember this, that not one of us is perfect. The ONLY way that we are able to rise above this imperfection, is to believe in the Forgiveness of Jesus Christ Our Lord, the Son of God, who literally was tortured and died for our sins. That's how much He Loves each and every one of us. He Loves you that much. Give the love back to Him and thank Him for His Love and Forgiveness.

 @MJ Seven Well that is fine but I think it is a bit beside the point in defining and implementing forgiveness. Of course we need to be aware of our own sins and being unwilling to face and own our sins their gravity and implications is a huge part of what people in the blind forgiveness camp demand.

 From a human point of view it is very difficult to forgive people who hurt us especially if they never say " i m.sorry..."but Jesus tells us to forgive,so the first step towards forgiveness is to pray for our enemies day after day,in the end we will feel so light in the body too.

 Thank you for this, Fr. Mark! I needed this reminder, not just about forgiveness but also the title of the book you recommended. I know from experience that when I have truly forgiven someone who has hurt me, it's not just liberating but I have also sensed a new glimmer of dignity that comes from the Lord, and it's the Lord that truly heals us by our willingness to forgive. Pride destroys our dignity and inner joy, and all concerned suffer. When I view it from afar, I can recognise the evil one at work within me, and that's a sobering reality! Gosh, ...

This is so difficult- I reflect on forgiving those that hurt me everyday (truth). Yet I still find myself struggling with hurt and anger from what has been done. I do not seek revenge, to be honest, I've often times given my pain from others to God. I've witnessed that God truly does handle those that cause us pain appropriately. We truly reap what we sow. I know I've been handed harsh lessons that make me reflect on the hurt I've caused others. ...

We MUST ALWAYS forgive to the point of martyrdom. I often reflect on how Our Blessed Mother felt at watching those men beat and nail her son to the cross. How any mother could endure that level of cruelty and hatred towards her child is unbearable to fathom. However God gave her the supernatural grace to endure this and like her son she could forgive those who did these evil things. When we are in Heaven we will see that to forgive was one of the most important thing we needed to learn while here on earth. Our Father forgives us ...
